第2問 (配点 10)

You are a member of the environmental club. The members are making plans for a new volunteer event and you have been asked to come up with suggestions. To get ideas, you are reading a blog about a community service project a student introduced at her school.

Ten-Minute Community Challenge

Arriving at school used to make me sad. There are several convenience stores and cafes in the area and people often drop litter on the ground — cans, bottles, sweet wrappers, plastic bags, etc. Last year, I decided to do something. I put up posters asking students to come to school ten minutes earlier than usual for one week and use the extra time to pick up a few pieces of litter. It worked! An average of 150 students (10% of the school) took part each day. Nearly a third of that number participated the whole week. There were even a few teachers. Within three days, the area around the school was already much nicer. By the end, it was perfect. Surprisingly, since this event the area has stayed litter-free. Why is this? Feedback from the event seems to give the answer:

Feedback from the students and the local community

BT: I hadn't realised how unhappy this problem was making me. I can finally walk to school with a big smile on my face.

AK: Great project! As an adult living near the school, I was so happy to see school students helping the community. I joined in and got some neighbours involved, too. We still do it twice a week.

RN: We appreciate the difference it has made. My friends and I would have joined in but we didn't see the poster.

CF: This project helped me understand how action by a high school student can have a big impact.

WL: I am so thankful. I've lived here for 15 years and I feel I can be proud of this town again.

- ① it only lasted for three days

第3問 (配点 9)

You are going to participate in a workplace tour. As preparation, you are reading an article in the school newspaper written by Hilda, who took part in it last year.

Behind the Scenes at the Grand Theater

For our school's workplace tour, we went on a behind-the-scenes tour of the Grand Theater. As we walked in, I noticed a busy atmosphere, with people setting up the ticket machines in the ticket sellers' booths. Our guide, Ms. Chen, greeted us with a smile and mentioned that because it was Tuesday, tickets were half-price. She expected to fill every seat in the theater.

Our first stop was the main stage, where some actors were rehearsing for the afternoon performance. Ms. Chen encouraged us to imagine ourselves as actors in a 1920s city scene, with tall painted buildings and bright shop signs.

We were all interested in the old-style streetlamps and storefronts on the backdrop. Ms. Chen explained that the following day, they would close the theater to repair any damage to the set and make sure it's all in good shape.

Next, we climbed up to the lighting room, where a technician showed us how she creates the atmosphere for each scene with different colors and brightness. She adjusted the lights from a sunny afternoon to a calm evening with just a few switches. Ms. Chen told us that the lights were very important because without them, the stage would feel empty and flat.

Behind the stage there was a room with 'props' written on the door. Inside, we saw shelves full of interesting items, from old-fashioned clocks to fake food. Ms. Chen picked up a glass bottle that was actually soft and light. We learned that many of these props look real but are made to be safe and easy to carry. Then she pointed out some posters stacked by the wall and told us that the current play would end this week. Next week, they would put up some new posters to publicize the upcoming show.

We left before the show. As I stepped onto the street, I looked at the front of the theater. Ms. Chen's prediction was right! I thought about everything I'd learned. Seeing all the work that went into each part of the production made me appreciate it even more.

問 1 Hilda's article also included student comments (①~④) describing the events in the theater tour. Put the comments in the order in which the events happened. 9 → 10 → 11 → 12

①

Being able to change day to night so easily for the production must make the controllers feel very powerful.

②

I had never considered working as a performer until Ms. Chen suggested we do so.

③

I thought it would be easier to let people reserve and pay for their seats using smartphones.

④

It was hard to believe the objects actors use on stage are often imitations.

問 2 From the tour, Hilda did not learn about 13 of the theater.

- ① a maintenance plan
- ② advertising materials
- ③ the reservations system
- ④ the storage space

問 3 When she left the theater, Hilda most likely saw 14.

- ① a long line of people
- ② actors arriving for work
- ③ posters for the next production
- ④ some bright streetlamps

第 4 問 (配点 12)

In English class you are writing an essay on a social issue you are interested in. This is your most recent draft. You are now working on revisions based on comments from your teacher.

Gardening and Community Building	Comments
Community gardens are pieces of land owned by local government where community members are allowed to grow vegetable or flower gardens in cooperation with their neighbors. To ensure that these gardens continue to exist in the future, it is important that we understand their value and their potential. This essay will discuss some benefits of community gardens. First, at a time when urban isolation is increasingly common, community gardens offer opportunities for friendly interaction, particularly among the elderly. Nowadays there are few locations where residents can interact, especially in big cities. ⁽¹⁾ ^ So, community gardens may serve as rare community hubs where residents of different generations get to know each other. Second, community gardens provide practical skills and knowledge for gardening and farming that residents can make use of. ⁽²⁾ ^ Working on gardens requires teamwork; this will help improve communication skills and the individual's sense of responsibility. Finally, ⁽³⁾ we are responsible for what we eat. Community ownership makes nutritious fruits, vegetables, and herbs more affordable. This leads to healthier eating habits, especially in areas where fresh produce may be limited or expensive. In conclusion, community gardens ⁽⁴⁾ help the elderly, provide valuable lessons, and lastly, enrich our diet. We should do all we can to support them, as they will become more and more important to us in later life.	(1) You're missing something here. Add more information to connect the two sentences. (2) Insert a connecting expression here. (3) This topic sentence doesn't really match this paragraph. 第5問 (配点 16)

Your college debate club regularly visits a local high school English club to provide free English tutoring. You are making a handout for a meeting about improving the tutoring program, based on the following article and questionnaire of students at local schools.

Encouraging Growth One Step at a Time

Skip Mitchell, life coach

Making changes can be challenging, especially if we cannot see a clear path forward. A mentor, who may be a tutor at school or a boss at work, can help. Mentors are those who advise or train others, and one method they may use is the GROW model. This model focuses more on asking learners questions regarding their goals rather than simply telling them what to do. One reason the GROW model is so effective is that it simplifies complex goals into smaller processes through four steps.

The first step in the GROW model is Goal. This is about clearly defining the desired outcome. A clear goal is important because it helps the learner stay focused and motivated. It also means that the learner and mentor will have the same outcome in mind throughout the process.

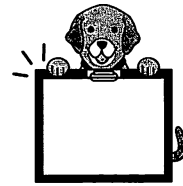

Next, the Reality step asks the learner to think about their current situation. By reflecting on their present circumstances, the learner can see the gap between their current position and their goal. As a result, they can have realistic expectations about what is possible.

In the Options step, the learner thinks of different ways to reach their goal. In turn, the mentor helps them to consider a variety of challenges they could face with each potential solution. This gives the learner a greater sense of control over the process.

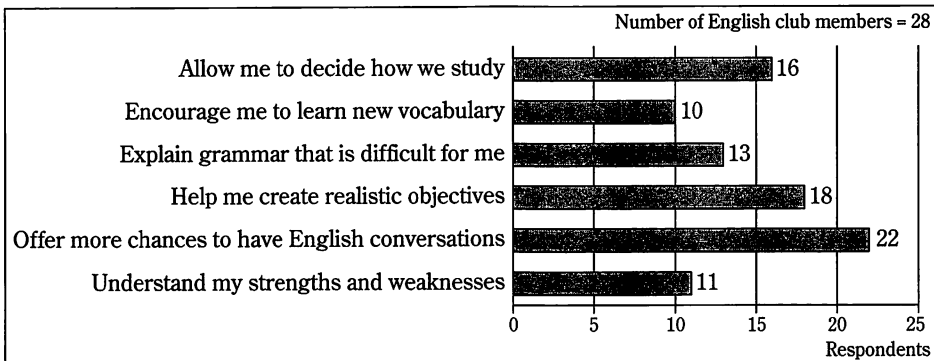

Finally, the Will step focuses on selecting a plan of action. This includes what the learner will do, when they will do it, and how they remain invested in it. The mentor can help to determine deadlines and consider how to keep the learner motivated.

Overall, the GROW model provides a simple yet effective way for learners to break down their goals into clear actions. As a result, they can be successful in both their personal and professional lives.

Results of Questionnaire

Q1: Choose all items that match what you would like your tutor to do more.

Q2: What do you think about the current English club and tutoring program?

Main Comments:

Student 1 (S1) : I learn a lot during the club, but some English grammar is really hard for me. I wish we spent more time focusing on this.

S2: Different approaches to learning vocabulary and other things are often suggested. I like it that I can pick the best methods for myself.

S3: I don't always get enough feedback on the mistakes I make. It would be helpful if my tutor could point out specific areas where I need to improve.

S4: I'm not very confident about giving explanations in English. I think we should spend more time having real discussions.

S5: I like it that we're trying new ways to study, like letting me choose different activities. It keeps the sessions interesting and helps me concentrate.

S6: Goals help me stay focused. I think we should set clear objectives each week, so I can know that I'm making progress.

第6問 (配点 15)

You are taking part in an English reading club at school. Each student was asked to read a short story in English, prepare notes, and introduce the story to other students. You are preparing your notes now.

A Newsworthy Friendship

Kelsey waved goodbye as she watched her friends Hannah and John get into the car. As they drove away, Hannah shouted, "We'll see you when we're home for winter break!"

Hannah and John were leaving for their first year of college. They'd both received scholarships and were excited to live away from home. Kelsey had introduced Hannah to John the previous year, and while she was happy for her friends, part of her wished she'd be joining them. Kelsey would start classes at the college in their hometown soon, but she wasn't sure what she wanted to study. And, she would continue living in the same house she had lived in for all eighteen years of her life. She began to feel lonely and frustrated.

That evening, Kelsey thought back to the first time she met Hannah when Hannah's family moved into the neighborhood 10 years earlier. She remembered how she and Hannah enjoyed taking pictures and making videos of themselves. Hannah always took better pictures, but Kelsey was always thinking creatively.

"Look at the colorful sky, Hannah! Take a picture," Kelsey said one evening. Hannah snapped a photo capturing the magical sunset. On a high school field trip to a botanical garden, Kelsey encouraged Hannah to take pictures of the unique plants.

"Zoom in on the leaves!" Kelsey instructed. "Look at the exquisite details!"

After the trip, the girls admired the photos together.

"You're so skilled behind the camera, Hannah. I think you should upload the photos you take to social media. People love scrolling through beautiful images online, and it's an opportunity to display your talent."

"You really think so?" Hannah asked.

"Absolutely! And you could get better. Look at this!"

Kelsey showed Hannah a flyer about the high school photography club recruiting new first-year students.

"You should join!" Kelsey said. "You can learn professional photography with a camera instead of a mobile phone."

Hannah smiled with curiosity.

She joined the club the following week and began posting photos regularly on social media. It didn't take long for others to notice Hannah's talent, and soon she was receiving many comments from her followers.

One week after saying goodbye to her friends, Kelsey started classes in her hometown. None of them were particularly interesting, and she grew dissatisfied with her situation. She began wondering if she had made the right decision to attend the local college. While walking to campus, she often daydreamed about her future. She contemplated what field of study to pursue, what job she might have, or if she would live in her hometown forever. But most often, she thought about her friends.

Kelsey met John during their first year of high school in essay writing class when the teacher assigned them to review each other's essays. Kelsey was impressed by John's work.

"Your writing is incredibly fluid and descriptive," she told him. "You have a special talent with words."

John looked surprised.

"You should keep practicing and write a short story for the contest next year," Kelsey continued. "Plus, writing can stimulate your creativity."

John didn't know what to say. While he enjoyed writing, he only did so for class assignments and was shy about sharing with others. He'd also never been told he was talented. Kelsey made him feel confident, and soon he was writing every day. He'd write about his feelings, observations, or challenges he was facing. He found the practice beneficial and was grateful for Kelsey's suggestion.

After nearly a year of daily writing, John submitted his writing to the contest and won first place!

Hannah and John met up a month after college classes had started. While walking past a notice board on campus, a poster about the student newspaper caught their eyes. They went to a meeting where the editor explained the process of planning the newspaper content, designing the layout, and publishing the newspaper. Although they were busy with their class work, Hannah and John agreed that it was an opportunity to develop their skills through experience, so they joined the newspaper.

One October evening while working on their newspaper assignments, they thought about Kelsey. Hannah told John about how Kelsey's convincing suggestion led to her studying photography, and John remembered how Kelsey had appreciated his writing. Suddenly, Hannah felt a bit guilty.

"You know what, John? I think it's time for us to inspire Kelsey. I think she would be an excellent newspaper editor! She's always been able to notice details, share her opinions, and make suggestions. She helped me realize my talent and pushed me to improve, but what have I ever done to help her?"

"You're right! She does have all the necessary skills! I wonder why I never thought of giving her any compliments. Are you thinking what I'm thinking?"

Hannah and John smiled and immediately called their friend.

It was winter break, and the three friends were sitting in a café in their hometown chatting about their first fall semester at college. Hannah and John showed Kelsey a copy of their school newspaper. On the front page was an article written by John with photos taken by Hannah. Kelsey smiled as she congratulated her friends.

“I also have some news to share,” Kelsey exclaimed. “I’ve decided to major in journalism! You phoned me and asked me to help your newspaper that night, but I’m sorry I can’t help you with your newspaper. Instead, your advice made me understand what to do. I decided to check out my school’s newspaper. Then I met with a school counselor, who told me about the journalism program. I have my first class in mass media next semester, and in the future, I hope to become a professional newspaper editor.”

“That’s amazing!” John exclaimed.

Hannah nodded in agreement.

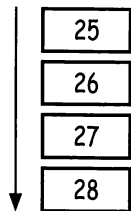

Kelsey smiled hopefully and thanked her friends. She finally felt like she was moving in the right direction.

第7問 (配点 14)

You are studying about world ecological problems. You are going to read the following article to understand what has happened with palm oil.

Palm oil is used as an ingredient in nearly half the products you might buy from a supermarket. Not long ago, however, palm oil had a bad reputation. Many tropical forests have been burned down to make space to grow oil palm trees, releasing carbon dioxide into the air and damaging the environment. Consequently, environmentalists began to consider palm oil production unethical and even encouraged people not to buy products made from it. Recently, however, recognizing the importance of palm oil for farmers around the world, they are instead focusing on helping them produce it in a more sustainable way.

The popularity of palm oil is due to its many properties and uses. It is almost solid at room temperature, for example, so it is a useful ingredient for margarine, mayonnaise, and other semi-solid spread foods. It also helps preserve food by slowing down the effects of spoiling. For producers, palm oil is easier to grow than crops such as soybeans and coconut oil, and it requires fewer chemicals to protect the plants from insects.

Farmers produced more than 70 million tons of palm oil in 2018, with more than 60 million tons coming from Indonesia and Malaysia alone. Demand has grown steadily from the early 1990s, when thousands of acres of forests were burned to make space for new palm oil plantations, particularly in Indonesia. By 2006, Indonesia had become the world's largest producer, and currently manufactures twice as much palm oil as Malaysia. As the industry grew, it contributed significantly to global deforestation. In response, a non-profit group called the Roundtable on Sustainable Palm Oil (RSPO), was set up in 2004 to certify palm oil products that are grown from ethical sources. It seeks to reduce the negative effects on the environment and communities. Their criteria for producers who want to be certified include minimal use of fire to clear land, fair treatment of workers, and proper consultation with local communities about land development. The RSPO reports that an increasing number of producers are committed to such sustainable practices. Although certification is not a legal requirement, shoppers who want to support sustainable practices can now look for the RSPO symbol on palm-oil products.

Meanwhile, scientists at an environmental research organization, SMARTRI, are being paid to advise the oil palm industry on sustainable practices. Scientists at SMARTRI believe that because palm oil is such an important crop, such partnerships are vital. They point out that the Indonesian government's new laws to stop unethical practices of the past have not been successful because some forests and communities are still being destroyed by unethical companies. Critics who distrust the industry, however, suggest that the scientists' research is not independent. They suspect that the companies' intentions are to pay the scientists to improve the industry's reputation while not changing their unethical practices. Others believe that any efforts to make the production of this important commodity more sustainable are worthwhile.

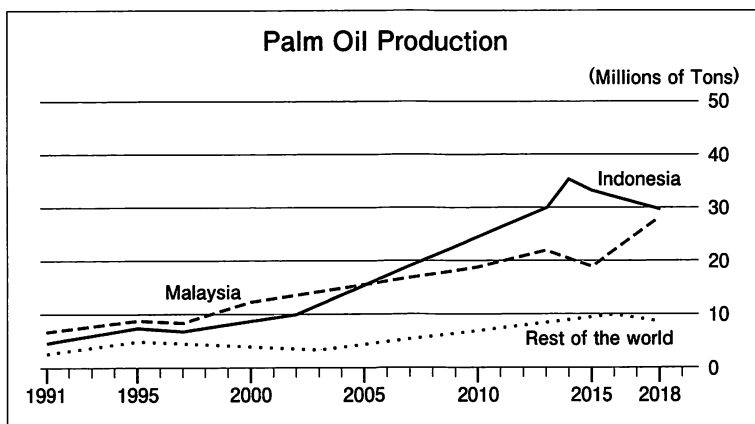

問 1 According to environmentalists, the production of palm oil 34 .

- ① created issues that are mostly ignored by consumers of palm oil products
- ② may decrease in time, so it is better to focus on other issues
- ③ was affected by rumors started by other vegetable oil industries
- ④ will continue, so it is better to help make it more sustainable

問2 Out of the following four graphs, which illustrates the historical production of palm oil the best? 35

④

問 3 According to the article, which two of the following tell us about the current situation in the palm oil industry? (Choose two options. The order does not matter.) 36 · 37

- ① Buyers have more options to choose sustainably-grown palm oil.
- ② Communities near the plantations are being given a share of the profits.
- ③ Consumers are becoming less willing to use palm oil products.
- ④ Governments have successfully stopped the burning of more forests.
- ⑤ Some companies have hired expert advisors to improve their practices.

問 4 The best title for this article is 38 .

- ① New Approaches to the Palm Oil Problem

第 8 問 (配点 18)

You are working on an essay about whether medical companies should test their products on animals. You will follow the steps below.

Step 1: Read and understand various viewpoints on animal testing.

Step 2: Take a position on medical testing on animals.

Step 3: Create an outline for an essay using additional sources.

[Step 1] Read various sources

Author A (Hospital patient) I am recovering from a very dangerous disease. I heard that the medicine the doctors gave me to save my life was developed through animal testing. I am deeply thankful for the medicine, but it troubles me to think that it was developed through the suffering of innocent animals. I have heard that often animal testing is chosen because it is less expensive than other methods, such as those using state-of-the-art technology. I believe that animal testing should be replaced by other methods.
Author B (Animal rights expert) Some people argue that animal testing is acceptable because animals also benefit from medicine created for humans. I think that is a poor argument. We only use medicine to save animals that are of use to humans, such as companion animals or farm animals, not wild animals. Furthermore, the procedures are often cruel. For example, the animals are given diseases and then tested to see if the drugs or treatment work for the target diseases. I think that it is immoral.
Author C (Doctor) If it were not for animal testing, drugs and treatments would be too dangerous to recommend to my patients and so many people would die — many of them very young. Of course, I feel sad about the death and suffering of the animals, but a huge number of people are saved thanks to the whole procedure involved in developing medicine, which includes animal testing. In my opinion, that would compensate for the sacrifice. Also, much of the research for human medicine is also useful in making animal medicine.

Author D (High school student)

My class discussed this topic at school in one of our biology lessons and I feel strongly against using animals in medical experiments. When it comes to testing new drugs or treatments, healthy animals are chosen as subjects and infected with disease. This is ethically wrong, I think. Our teacher told us that there are alternative methods for testing medicine. These include testing on human cells in test tubes, or predicting results using computer software rather than live animals. I hope that these methods will be more widely adopted.

Author E (Scientist)

At my laboratory, we test medicines and treatments on animals every day. We test them on small animals like rats, but we also test them on dogs and chimpanzees. Sadly, many of the animals suffer a lot. I feel terrible when I see this every day. However, I wish people would understand that we are following very strict rules to keep the animals in decent conditions and that there are few really good alternatives. Actually, very few animals die and suffer in testing compared with the number of human lives we will save.

問 1 Both Authors B and D mention that 39.

- ① human medicines should be tested on humans because animals are not similar enough
- ② nowadays we can verify the safety of new medicines without using animal testing
- ③ pets and farm animals also benefit from the medical research relying on animal testing
- ④ the animals used in medical testing are intentionally made sick by the researchers

問 2 Author A implies that 40.

- ① he appreciates the chance to live that animals have given him
- ② he will dedicate his life to saving animals after he recovers
- ③ only medicine that is tested on animals can save the lives of humans
- ④ people should not have negative images of animal testing anymore

[Step 2] Take a position

問3 Now that you understand the various viewpoints, you have taken a position on medical testing on animals, and have written it out as below. Choose the best options to complete 41 – 43. (You must have all of 41 – 43 correct to get points.)

Your position: Testing medicine on animals is the right thing to do.

- Authors 41 and 42 support your position.
- The main argument of the two authors: 43.

Options for 41 and 42 (The order does not matter.)

- ① A
- ② B
- ③ C
- ④ D
- ⑤ E

Options for 43

- ① Animals should only be used to find cures for diseases that affect people with healthy lifestyles.
- ② It is better to test medicines on small animals like rats because they may feel less pain than bigger animals.
- ③ The number of lives that will be saved by animal testing is large enough to make testing acceptable.
- ④ The number of medicines that can be made through animal testing is higher than if we only tested on humans.

[Step 3] Create an outline using Sources A and B

Outline of your essay:

Testing medicines on animals is an acceptable practice

Introduction

Testing medicines on animals has made it possible to produce many medicines. We should not stop researchers from using this important tool.

Body

Reason 1: [From Step 2]

Reason 2: [Based on Source A] (44)

Reason 3: [Based on evidence (45) from Source B]

Conclusion

Testing medicine on animals is the right thing to do.

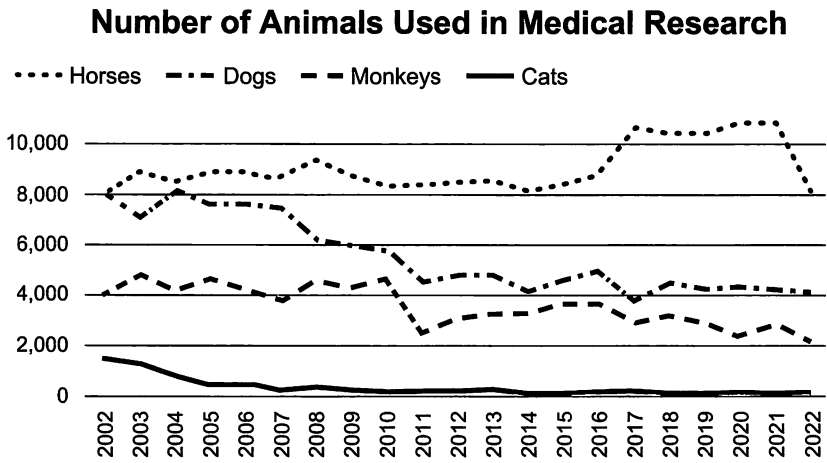

Source A

Animal testing is often debated because of its cost in terms of animal lives. It is an emotional issue for most people. However, it's crucial to understand the strict rules that govern animal testing, aimed at ensuring humane treatment. Institutions conducting animal research are required to follow strict laws, which require testers to get approval for their research from special committees. Such committees are usually made up of experts in veterinary science, ethics, and research. They carefully check the proposed studies to ensure they are necessary and that every possible measure is taken to minimize animal suffering. Furthermore, researchers must follow comprehensive guidelines focusing on animal welfare. These include providing proper care, reducing the number of animals used, and refining procedures to reduce emotional stress. Regular inspections ensure these standards are maintained. While the loss of animal life in research is a sad reality, these regulations and observation systems help raise the level of ethical responsibility in scientific exploration.

Source B

The organizations that use animals in their medical research in the UK must record the number of experiments they do on live animals every year. The graph below shows how many horses, dogs, cats, and monkeys are used in medical research.

問 4 Based on Source A, which of the following is the most appropriate for Reason 2? 44

- ① Experts in veterinary science are advising researchers to use animals to find new medicines for humans.
- ② The government is encouraging animal testing by publishing guidelines for researchers to use.
- ③ The laws surrounding the use of animals for medical research are likely to become stricter in the future.
- ④ While it is unfortunate that some animals must die for research, there are rules in place to reduce their pain.

問 5 For Reason 3, you have decided to write, “Researchers are using more caution in choosing whether or not to test medicines on certain animals.” Based on Source B, which option best supports this statement? 45

- ① About half as many dogs and monkeys were used in research in 2022 compared with 20 years before. This shows a growing concern for the welfare of these animals.
- ② Medical research using monkeys has dropped at nearly twice the rate of research involving dogs. This suggests that our relationship with dogs is being considered.
- ③ The number of cats and horses used for medical testing has remained fairly constant. These animals must have proven valuable to medical science.
- ④ The use of dogs and monkeys sharply decreased during the period 2012-2022. More and more researchers have come to respond to the demand for animal welfare.
